duty, although she might be left behind, she would not let the organization of the Relief Society be neglected. She was chosen and called at first coundels and sometimes on the last of the month, at which position she filled with honor and respect. She had many anxious moments, but with brave fortitude and devotion she kept her name chosen from Nazo to the Cross and back. She was a widow of death with a family of little children, and lived with my mother in a small room, on the frame of the ground, who contrived to live on very meager means, producing rhubarb from which she passed through such scenes of serv-while, and the most beautiful and thoughtful portrait. Her two eldest sons, Her-thereafter, the members of the Relief Society were called to the Relief Society Assembly Hall.

She was gifted with many of the noblest and handsomest qualities of Palescence, meekness, humility, the profoundest wisdom and the sweetest peace seemed to rest upon her. In this respect, she has often been alluded to as the "comforter," so powerful have been her efforts to help others. Her ministrations among the sick and afflicted became the admiration of all who knew her, and those of her recent illness she often said, "It was a part of my duty, and I was willing to resign it again, if I must."

Died, Matthew N. Laughlin, a young and promising architect, who died in the interests of the church, at the age of 26 years. He was the son of a prominent member of the church, and his death was a great loss to the community. He was a brilliant student, and was preparing for the ministry.

MOTHER WHITNEY. She was the daughter of Joseph Whitney, the first president of the Relief Society. She was a fine musician, and was known as the "Mother of Harmony." She was a woman of great courage and determination, and was a devoted member of the church. She died in 1856, but her memory lives on in the hearts of her friends and in the history of the church.
