THE GETTYSBURG STAR & REPUBLICAN CANNER.

GETTYSBURG, THURSDAY, JULY 30.

By the preceding instructions.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 14, 1863.

To the Editor of the "Canner".

The following are a number of articles which have been sent to me in advance, to be published as soon as possible, in consequence of the extraordinary demands upon the time and energies of the public that the great event of the day has made necessary. I have been instructed by the officials of the city, and by the Governor and other public officials, to take care of all the matters connected with the public war, and to neglect nothing that can aid in the promotion of the public good.

I have been at the head of a number of men in the city, and have been working hard to get all the necessary arrangements made for the event. I have been in constant communication with the Governor and other public officials, and have been doing all that I can to aid in the promotion of the public good.

LITERARY.
The recent publication of Mr. S. W. Fenton's 'History of the United States,' has been much noticed by critics, both at home and abroad. The work is composed of a series of letters, addressed by a supposed citizen of the United States, to his friends in Europe. The letters are written in a style which is both graceful and instructive, and are calculated to interest and excite the reader's attention. The author has taken pains to give a correct and comprehensive view of the history of the United States, and has avoided all prejudice and partiality. The work is well calculated to be a valuable addition to the literature of the country, and is likely to be highly esteemed by all who are interested in the history of the United States. It is published by J. B. Lippincott & Co., of Philadelphia.
The city of the dead.

The matter of the city of the dead is not confined to a few instances. In many a city, there are thousands of dead souls, whose spirits are in a state of pain and suffering, longing to be released from the bondage of the body. The city of the dead is a place where the dead remain, and it is the duty of the living to remember them and pray for their souls.

John Quincy Adams, one of the earliest editors of the Boston Transcript, wrote this essay in 1828. Adams, a prominent figure in American history, served as a statesman and diplomat. The essay reflects his early thoughts on the nature of journalism and the role of newspapers in society. It is a reflection on the historical context of journalism and the challenges faced by early journalists.
