The side rooms were occupied as follows:
The first, in the southeast corner, as a private office.
The second, by Heber C. Kimball, W. Richards and myself. The third and fourth by others of the Twelve. Fifth, by Joseph Young and Presidency of the Seventies. Sixth, for washing and anointing the elders.

On the north side: first, bishop and lesser priesthood. Second, president of the stake and high council; third and fourth, high priests' quorum; fifth elders' quorum; sixth, washing and anointing room occupied by the sisters.

The main room of the attic story is eighty-eight feet two inches long and twenty-eight feet eight inches wide. It is arched over, and the arch is divided into six spaces by cross beams to support the roof. There are six small rooms on each side about fourteen feet square. The last one on the east end on each side is a little smaller.

A preparation room.

On the north side, the first east room is for Bishop Whitney and the lesser priesthood. The second is for the high council, the third and fourth for President George Miller and the high priests' quorum. The fifth is the elders' room, and the sixth, the female preparation room.

This afternoon, the new altar was used for the first time, and four individuals and their wives were sealed.

The altar is about two and one-half feet high and two and one-half feet long and about one foot wide, rising from a platform about 8 or 9 inches high and extending out on all sides about a foot, forming a convenient place to kneel upon.

The top of the altar and the platform for kneeling upon are covered with cushions of scarlet damask cloth; the sides of the upright part or body of the altar are covered with white linen.
The side rooms were occupied as follows:
The first, in the southeast corner as a private office.
The second, by Heber C. Kimball, W. Richards and myself. The third and fourth by others of the Twelve; Fifth, by Joseph Young and Presidency of the Seventies; Sixth, for washing and anointing the elders.

On the north side: first, bishops and lesser priesthood. Second, president of the stake and high council; third and fourth, high priests' quorum; fifth, elders quorum; sixth, washing and anointing room.

The main room of the attic story is eighty-eight feet two inches long and twenty-eight feet eight inches wide. It is arched over, and the arch is divided into six spaces by cross beams to support the roof. There are six small rooms on each side about fourteen feet square. The last one on the east end on each side is a little smaller. A preparation room.

On the north side, the first east room is for Bishop Whitney and the lesser priesthood. The second is for the high council, the third and fourth for President George Miller and the high priests' quorum. The fifth room is for sealing in the temple, including the altar.